TELECOMMUNICATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL CONVENES AT GW

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Members of an industry/government advisory council and a steering committee formed to guide the activities of George Washington University's new Center for Telecommunications Studies were introduced at a luncheon held at GW Monday, October 27. The steering committee, composed of deans of GW's various colleges, provides the center with academic and policy guidance. The advisory council is composed of government and industry leaders in telecommunications.

Created in response to the rapid growth of telecommunications in the Washington area, the center is multidisciplinary and will encompass a broad spectrum of teaching and research activities geared to the telecommunications needs of government and industry.

Directed by GW Research Professor of Engineering Peter M. Kelly, the center cooperates with several GW schools in offering three separate master's degree programs: the Master of Science in Special Studies from the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, the Master of Science in Telecommunications and Computers from the School of Engineering and Applied Science, and the Master of Public Administration from the School of Government and Business Administration.

The center has been established in close cooperation with GW's School of Engineering and Applied Science, which offers degrees through the doctorate level in engineering and scientific areas relevant to telecommunications.

DAVIS GIFT BENEFITS GW HOSPITAL

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Evelyn Y. Davis, a famous annual meeting attender and editor of Highlights and Lowlights, a business publication sold only to presidents and corporate chief executives, has given $10,000 to George Washington University where she was formerly a student. Mrs. Davis' gift will go toward a university hospital patient room which will carry her name.

Mrs. Davis owns stock in 138 corporations and attends some 70 stockholders' meetings each year across the country, an activity which has brought her the title "corporate gadfly." Her newsletter, published annually, rates corporations on their openness to stockholder proposals and the conduct of meetings.

Among her proposals is a measure to restrict corporate gifts to charities. "Such donations would be better made by individual stockholders through increased dividends," explains Mrs. Davis, "rather than by corporate directors." Her contribution to GW is the first substantial donation she has made to an educational institution.

Mrs. Davis attended George Washington University and was a resident of Hattie M. Strong dormitory. She also studied at Western Maryland College and the New York Institute of Finance.

From: Diane H. Rush, News Manager, Public Relations

Re: Upcoming story about D.C. area universities in Washingtonian Magazine

Attached are results compiled for a questionnaire submitted to the public relations office by Washingtonian Magazine reporter Peter McGrath (pronounced McGraw) who is doing an update on a 1966 two-part series on Washington's "pony league" universities. (Also see articles attached.)

I am sure Mr. McGrath will be contacting you soon for interviews. You may want to give some thought as to how this and other information you have shows improvement at GW in the past decade.

Note: Dr. Elliott, one of the press people attending the Presidents' Consortium dinner Thursday, November 13 will be Mr. McGrath.

PRO FEMINA THEATER PERFORMS AT GW

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- George Washington University's Women's Studies Program and Policy Center is sponsoring a performance of the Pro Femina Theater, a group dedicated to exploring human relationships from a woman's perspective, on Monday, November 24, at 8 p.m. in the Marvin Theater, 800 21st St., NW. Tickets, available at the door, are $8. A reception will follow the play.

The original play, "An I for a You," was also performed at the International Festival of Women Artists during the U.N. Mid-Decade World Conference for Women in Copenhagen this summer. It is intended to stimulate thought and awareness and will be followed by a discussion with the audience.

All proceeds of this event will be donated to the Virginia R. Allan Full Partnership Fund and used to:

- develop activities promoting understanding of the effects of domestic and foreign policy on women and men,
- encourage women's participation in forming public policy, and
- provide scholarship assistance and financial aid.

Virginia Allan, an outstanding leader of the women's movement nationally and internationally, heads GW's women's studies program.

PROFESSOR ROBERT WHITNEY BOLWELL

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Robert Whitney Bolwell, 89, professor emeritus of American literature at George Washington University, died of sepsis caused by exfoliate dermatitis on November 14, 1980, at Taylor Hospital in Ridley Park, Pa. He had been a resident of Swarthmore, Pa., for the last year and a half, since August, 1979. He had lived in suburban Maryland since the early 1920s.

Born October 10, 1891, in Brooklyn, N.Y., he received a B.A. degree from Western Reserve University in Cleveland in 1916, and an M.A. (1917) and a Ph.D. (1921) from Columbia University in New York. Dr. Bolwell taught at Columbia prior to joining the faculty at George Washington University as assistant professor of English in 1920. In 1929, he was named professor of American literature and taught until 1957 when he retired as professor emeritus. In 1932, he was appointed dean of the summer sessions at GW and in 1939 became chairman of the university's graduate council, succeeding the late Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin. He held that post until 1957. He was honored by the GW General Alumni Association in 1946 and received the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters from GW in February of 1957. In the spring semester of 1952 he was guest professor of American literature at the University of Goettingen, Germany.

Dr. Bolwell was particularly known for his work in developing an American studies major at George Washington, a program now almost universally offered at American colleges and universities. He organized the American Thought and Civilization major in 1936, ignoring established departmental lines to allow students to gain a broad background in American art, philosophy, history, economics and political science as well as in literature.

He was the author of "At Large in Germany," "After College - What?" and "The Life and Works of John Heywood." He edited "The Renaissance" volume of the English Literature Series and contributed to numerous scholarly publications.

Professor Bolwell was a member of the Modern Language Association, the American Association of University Professors, Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Nu social fraternity, the Federal Schoolmen's Club and the Cosmos Club.

He is survived by his wife, the former Gretchen Rogers, professor emeritus of German at GW, and a sister, Beatrice Koster, of Brooklyn, N.Y.

A funeral service will be held on Saturday, November 22, at 11 a.m. at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, 12621 Old Columbia Pike, Silver Spring, Md. The family suggests that expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to St. Mark's Church.

MEMO TO: Assignment Editors

RE: GW Students Attempt to Break
Guinness Weight Lifting Record

For a 24-hour period beginning at noon, Sunday, November 23, five George Washington University undergraduate students will attempt to break the current Guinness Book of Records relay weight lifting record of 2,204,622 pounds. Tony Avedisian, Robert Murray, Douglas Fishman, Christopher Meyer and Jeff Balzar will take turns lifting two barbells of varying weight. They have been preparing for a try at the record for 2 1/2 months in their dormitory rooms.

In close correspondence with Guinness Assistant Sports Editor Beverly Waites, the students will be under the supervision of Pete Miller of the Potomac Valley Association of the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU). Miller will provide the "unremitting surveillance" required by Guinness.

The world record attempt will take place in the recreation room of GW's Thurston Hall, 1900 F St. NW.

Dear Mr. Shiver:

Ever since someone discovered Johnny couldn't read, criticism has mounted against teacher education--the schools and colleges that turn out our classroom teachers.

In an effort to take a close look at themselves and consider this criticism seriously, the faculty members of the School of Education and Human Development at George Washington University will participate in an inhouse seminar entitled "Education of the Educators: Are We Failing the Schools?" on Tuesday, November 25, 8:45 a.m. to noon in the Board Room, 8th floor, Rice Hall, 2121 Eye St., NW.

Strengths and weaknesses in preparing teachers, as observed by a major school system that must use the products of teacher education, will be discussed by Theodore Forte, director of human relations and staff development for Norfolk, Va., public schools.

Successful programs and practices for strengthening teachers will be the topic of Allen Schmieder, chief of the national teacher centers program for the U.S. Department of Education.

Reacting to their remarks will be two GW education faculty members, Dr. Rita Ives, chairwoman of the special education department and Dr. Edwin Kulawiec, professor of education. For a national perspective, Dr. David Imig, executive director of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education, will also respond.

About half the program will be devoted to presentations and reactions; the second half will be thrown open for discussion involving the entire faculty.

Presiding at the seminar will be GW's education dean Eugene Kelly Jr., the only dean of a U.S. school of education selected for the transition team when the U.S. Department of Education was formed.

A limited number of reporters are being invited to this seminar, even though it is an internal function. This offers an unusual opportunity for you to present to the public the candid self-examination of teacher education--a segment of one of our most maligned institutions.

Sincerely,

TRAVEL AND TOURISM EXPERTS MEET AT GW

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- The future of travel and tourism was the topic of a recent meeting of George Washington University's travel and tourism program advisory committee.

Composed of leaders in government and industry, the committee discussed marketing and promotion, services and attractions development, travel and transportation and human resource development and training--all current specializations in the GW program. Conclusions reached during the meeting included the following:

- Education in travel and tourism must place major emphasis on the ability to understand computer use;
- Increasing consideration must be given to research and study of travel needs and desires of older persons;
- Travel education and research will have to be oriented more towards consumer research and an understanding of the many new and diverse market segments;
- Foreign travel to the U.S. must receive greater emphasis in marketing courses;
- Education must go more deeply into government relationships and functioning.

The GW travel and tourism program has almost 100 students, both undergraduate and graduate. This year GW hosted the International Symposium on Tourism and the Next Decade and has published the findings of the symposium in three volumes: International Symposium: Summary and Recommendations, Tourism Planning and Development Issues, and Tourism Marketing and Management Issues.

The advisory committee plans to meet in the spring and review the progress of GW's program.

CHEYENNE STUDENT PRESIDENT FOR A DAY AT GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Joe Bluemel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bryce L. Bluemel of Sun Valley Drive, Cheyenne, Wyoming, was "President for a Day" at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., on Friday, November 14. He bid in the privilege last February at GW's annual student fundraiser, Martha's Marathon of Birthday Bargains. The marathon, an auction of special items and privileges, raises funds for residence hall fees for needy GW students.

Beginning at 8:45 a.m., Bluemel accompanied GW President Lloyd H. Elliott throughout the day. At 2:10 p.m. he presided at the monthly meeting of the university's Faculty Senate, conducting the meeting according to parliamentary procedure while President Elliott sat by.

Bluemel, a senior majoring in economics, expects to be graduated from George Washington in May 1981, and hopes to attend law school. He is a graduate of Cheyenne East High School. At GW he has been associate editor of the student newspaper, The Hatchet. He is now working 20 hours a week at the Federal Communications Commission as an assistant economist in the commission's Office of Plans and Policy.

A CHALLENGE TO THE AUTHORITY OF THE LEGAL PSYCHIATRIST

SUBJECT OF SPEECH DURING STATE BAR MEETING

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Lawyer/doctor Jonas Robitscher will speak on "A Challenge to the Authority of the Legal Psychiatrist" during a special George Washington University National Law Center alumni breakfast in Atlanta on Friday, December 5 at 8 a.m. The breakfast will be held at the Omni International Hotel during the mid-winter meeting of the State Bar of Georgia.

Dr. Robitscher, who holds degrees in law and medicine from GW, is currently Henry Luce Professor of Law and Behavioral Sciences at Emory University. His most recent book, The Powers of Psychiatry, deals with the psychiatrist's unchallenged power to control our lives and what can and must be done about it.

21ST AND H STREETS, N.W.

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Two concurrent exhibitions, each educational and informative, are scheduled for George Washington University's Dimock Gallery from December 10 through January 9, 1981.

"Know What You See: the Examination and Treatment of Paintings" has been organized by Louis Pomerantz for the Foundation of the American Institute for Conservation and circulated by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service. The exhibit focuses on the art conservator's techniques for examining paintings through photo-optical means such as X-ray, infrared and ultraviolet light, and microscopic examination, and presents selected conservation treatments.

"Process and Progress in Conservation: Programme for a Small Museum" will consist of objects from the GW permanent collection which have recently undergone conservation treatments including paintings, sculpture, works on paper and ceramics. Explanatory photographs and diagrams compiled with the help of conservators will supplement the exhibition.

Both exhibitions are made possible by a grant from the Institute of Museum Services, a federal agency in the Department of Education.

The Dimock Gallery, off the lower lounge of Lisner Auditorium, 21st and H Streets, N.W., is open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

A film, "Paintings: Prescription for Survival," will be shown on Wednesday, December 10, in the lower lounge of Lisner Auditorium (outside the Dimock Gallery) at 7 p.m., in conjunction with the opening of the exhibitions. Admission is free.

OLDER WOMEN'S ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

THE FOCUS OF GW STUDY

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- "Older Women: The Economics of Aging" is the title of a report published recently by the Women's Studies Program and Policy Center at George Washington University in conjunction with the Women's Research and Education Institute of the Congresswomen's Caucus. The study defines the economic status of older women in America and analyzes the factors affecting this status.

The 57-page report profiles aging women and includes race, marital status, living arrangements and income. Women comprise 59 percent of persons 65 and over, the report says, and women outnumber men two to one in the rapidly expanding population over 75.

In addition, larger numbers of older women are widows and live alone, in contrast to older men who are generally married and living with their wives. Because of the traditional place of women, they tend to be poorer and have fewer financial resources with which to support themselves in later years than men do.

Factors contributing to the limited incomes of older women are discussed, including socialization, economic impact of marital dissolution, limited employment opportunity and limited income from public programs and private pensions.

Lifelong socialization, encouraged by church, state, school and family, for passive and dependent roles makes women particularly vulnerable in old age, the report says.

"Most women," it continues, "do not anticipate that they may spend years alone as widows or that they may have to function independently. Their skills and experience with legal and financial matters, decision-making and employment may be limited. In addition, the years they may have devoted to being wives, mothers and homemakers, and the skills they have developed, are not given economic value in this society. Unlike older men, many older women must confront the economic realities of aging alone and are often ill-prepared by previous experience to do so."

Some policy options helpful in meeting the needs of these women are suggested, including developing comprehensive data, promoting public awareness, insuring adequate income, encouraging employment and improving service program design and delivery.

For a copy of this report, call the women's studies office at GW, 676-6942.

SECRETS OF JUPITER SUBJECT OF FREE LECTURE AT GW

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- While popular attention is focused on the Pioneer space probe's pictures of the planet Saturn, scientists are now digesting Pioneer's information on the planet Jupiter and its moons. Find out what they have learned at a free George Washington University lecture on Tuesday, December 2 at 8 p.m. Hear GW professor of physics Herman H. Hobbs speak on "The Jovian Revelations" and discover the fifth planet from the Sun.

The First Wednesday Lecture Series, of which Dr. Hobbs' presentation is a part, is held each month in rooms 410-415, 4th floor, GW's Marvin Center, 21st and H Streets, NW. (Due to the religious holiday, December's lecture will be given on a Tuesday.) To ensure seating, those planning to attend should call the Alumni Relations Office at least a day in advance at (202) 676-6435. The public is cordially invited to attend.
